IMCoS International Weekend in Hungary

5 – 7 September, 2008

Budapest

2008

WELCOME to HUNGARY!

For many of you, this is certainly not your first visit to Hungary. More than ten years ago, in September 1997, we hosted the participants of the 16th IMCoS International Symposium, Old Maps in the Heart of Europe, in Budapest ("Pearl of the Danube"). For those who could participate, guests and host alike, this was a memorable event.

This year we are offering a weekend visit to Hungary which will fill the long gap between New Zealand in this February and the Norwegian International Symposium in September 2009. As friends of early maps, you were invited again to Hungary, but this time we will not listen to lecturers and see map collections in the capital city. This is not a formal, academic event but a tour for map enthusiast: an opportunity to spend a nice weekend with map people, make friends and enjoy the friendly IMCoS atmosphere.

Our small group represents the membership of the only international society for map collectors: we are from three continents and from seven different countries, including the remote Philippine islands or Guatemala. It is a great honour that important IMCoS Executive Committee members are with us: IMCoS Chairman Hans Kok (with Evi) and former Chairman Jenny Harvey (with Ian, of course), and we also have the society's famous photographer, David Webb. IMCoS International Representative Rolph Langlais and his wife Ursula are here. Rolph had to see how the plan we discussed at the 2007 Imago Mundi Conference in Berne was realized. Rolf took a long journey from Manila; Jens and Erik, as well as Cal and Carol crossed the Atlantic to be with us. The Gunnar and Ingalill came from Sweden, David from the UK.

The tour includes visits to wonderful places in the Hungarian countryside, but it is equally important that you spend a nice weekend with other mapping enthusiasts. There will be time to enjoy the mild weather on the Great Hungarian Plain and at Lake Balaton, and there will be visits to historic buildings and libraries, old maps, atlases and books. Of course, we taste the famous Hungarian food and wine and listen to folk music.

This is not a formal meeting, so you can sit back, relax and enjoy the tour!

The University Library of Eötvös Loránd University is one of the oldest and permanently active public library in Hungary. The genesis of the University's library is traceable to a Jesuite college's library, which was founded in 1561. The University was founded by Pázmány Péter, the Primate of Hungary in 1635, in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia.) The university and the library - with more than 15 000 volumes - moved to Buda in 1777, and in 1784 to the town of Pest. From the beginning the University Library is the national scientific library for philosophy, history of the Middle Ages and partly that of the Modern Age, and history of religion and church history. Nowadays we have more than 16 000 registered visitors.

10.30-12.00 Special visit to the University Library. Cartographic treasures from the rare Book Collection.

Short presentations by Klára Boross, Dr. Katalin Klimes Szmik, Róbert Szvorenyi

The Rare Book Department collects all documents printed in non-Hungarian language outside the country between 1501-1800. This collection consists of three parts: the Antiqua (16. century), the Baroque (17. century) and the Enlightenment (18. century) collections. These approximately 65000 volumes constitute significant part of the museum stock. Most of these volumes were acquired before the secularization of the University Library (1777). The college library, which collected ancient authors and theology in the beginning, gradually became the university library collecting history, geography, law, natural sciences, mathematics, medicine. At the end of the 17th century the University Library had already 6000 volumes. The RBD was established in 2000. The librarians of RBD developed three new collections separating the documents, printed between 1501-1800, according to centuries. At present 7200 Antiquas, 11000 Baroques, and 45000 Enlightenment volumes are preserved by RBD. All 9600 records of the electronic inventory-book have been converted into our integral library system, called Horizon (2004). We also finished digitalization of the title page of the first 2000 Antiquas, which is also accessible in the Bibliotheca Antiqua Digitalis.

After the library visit participants are free to walk in the city, visit shops or have lunch.

This town, situated 120 km south of Budapest on the east bank of the Danube, on a wide plateau stretching between the Danube and Tisza rivers, is known mainly for the cultivation of paprika (Hungarian red pepper), but its name is also synonymous with high-quality folk-art, especially in the form of the colourful embroidery to be found on textiles, walls and furnishings. In the 11th century the first king of Hungary, Saint Stephen made Kalocsa the diocesan town for this bank of the Danube. The first archbishop, an abbot by the name of Astrik, delivered the holy crown, which was a gift from the Pope, to the king. From the 19th century onwards the area around Kalocsa developed into a fertile agricultural region, and its products still supplies the local food-processing factories.

The Archdiocesan Library's map collection is one of the largest and oldest private collections in Hungary. The cartography related collection of the library, some 26 000 volumes(!), includes rare printed and manuscript material, starting with Isidorus' Etymologiarum from 1477 with the first printed map. The history of the library also goes back to the 15th century. The building was constructed and the collection enlarged by the influential archbishops of Kalocsa after the Turkish Wars in the 18th century. They obtained valuable additions to their collection through their agents in Europe. The Baroque library, in the Archbishop's palace, has been recently renovated and its uniformly bound, sometimes untouched volumes, as well as the splendid interior of the Patachich Room offers the original atmosphere of the 18th century library, a unique experience for book lovers and map enthusiasts.

In 1772 Balatonfüred was officially declared a spa town. Between 1825 and 1848 it became the meeting-place of the Hungarian intelligentsia of the Reform Period, and in 1831 the town council presented it with the first permanent theater to perform plays in the Hungarian language. It was from Balatonfüred harbour that the first steamship sailed on Lake Balaton in 1846.
